“ My mom and dad, Lottie and Marion Crofts, took me and my brother, Bob, to aunt Teny's and uncle Johnny's house every time we went to Indianapolis for a family visit. Aunt Teny was my dad's sister. I remember their house, way out in the country (!!) and aunt Teny's salt and pepper shaker collection. I also remember that she gave my brother an unusual wedding gift: a set of ash trays and lamps that looked like Aladdin figures. They were pink and black. I probably shouldn't say this, but I think that aunt Teny was my dad's favorite female sibling. I loved her laughter and sense of humor. I remember her teasing my dad about anything she could think of, truth or fiction. My mom loved aunt Teny too; they got along so well. And, of course, Shirley, my cousin, was born the same year as I was, so we had that in common with aunt Teny and uncle Johnny too. (Marylee Crofts)

“ OK, so here I am commenting on my own comments! First of all, her mom was my aunt Ellen, not aunt Ellen's sister, Teny. Then it dawned on me that all of my comments were about memories of Teny Rose's mom and dad, not about her!! I knew her parents better than I knew my cousin herself because I spent more time with them, mostly when I was young and my family drove down from South Bend to visit the Indianapolis kin.

Teny Rose and I did meet and chat at subsequent family reunions; we exchanged Christmas cards and family news and saw one another on the few occasions when I visited Indianapolis in later years. But I never lived there and, as busy, married adults, we had less contact. I do, however, remember her as a FUN LOVING cousin, and she was close to my brother and his wife; they got together often during the later years.

Sorry for the confusion; old age is creeping in, for sure! I am just a tad younger than Teny Rose; please forgive my mix-ups.
