“ I am saddened to read of Herbie's passing (2 years later). He and I were the only 2 Marines in the Mobile Shop at Indiana Bell and I will always remember he saved my bacon when I dropped a microwave transmitter traveling wave tube and broke it (worth several hundred dollars in the 1960s). He was my friend and I enjoyed playing euchre with him at lunch. Semper Fi brother.

“ I was very gratified in reading Ed Steele's post about the action's my brother Herb took in the Korean War. Herb was humble and didn't talk much about this part of his life. He was a wonderful representative of our family in all the things he did in life. As he was my parents first child (one of nine) we all looked up to him. He was my hero when I was 7 years old. I'm 77 now and that still stands.

“ Herb Everson as a teenaged rifleman in the USMC took part in a very dangerous sea-land invasion of Korea in September 1950. General Douglas McArthur had devised a very daring and dangerous landing at Inchon. This venture was very difficult because of tides and shoals along with other geographical complications. The invasion's success was a toss-up and Herb was there.

It was my privilege to know Herb for 42 years as a nearby neighbor. He regularly wore his bright red USMC hat and had a Marine sticker on his car. He always thought of himself as an ordinary guy who survived the war and enjoyed a wonderful life with Shirley whom he dearly missed. He couldn't speak of her after her death in 2018 without tears. RIP, Herb. SEMPER FI.
