“ I never knew him personally, yet his impact reached me and many others. His enthusiasm, encouragement, and willingness to help others succeed left a lasting impression. Four years later, he is still remembered.

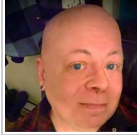

To his family: I pray you find comfort in knowing that he mattered, he was appreciated, and his life made a difference in more lives than you may ever know.

“ Wednesday April 6, 2022

I've struggled for nearly two weeks on how to capture this into print. When I met Jay in 2002, I was unprepared to meet what would become the most significant figure in my life for the past two decades. His legacy on me, my family, and how I relate to others has been forever impacted by knowing him. A man of shorter stature, he was larger than life. His comfort and ease with total strangers was easily evident with his signature jovial laugh, broad smile, and his tirelessly big spirit. He loved people. And people found comfort in his presence--whether it was a family function, a musical performance on stage, motivational speaking through Keller Williams, or at an annual home viewing of Christmas Vacation (ridiculously, in costume, of course).

I was unprepared to fall in love with this man. We all-too-briefly allowed our deep personal friendship to evolve into a romantic relationship in 2010. And while that ultimately didn't work out longer than our one year together, I say with confidence today that I loved him madly, deeply, and hard during those days, and all the days since. Every relationship I may ever experience will always be scaled against the "Jay Factor". The song I'll Never Love Again from the movie A Star is Born (2018) by Lady Gaga captures this for me.

Jay and I took a hard parting of our friendship in 2013. I lost total contact with him at this point. We were never able to clear the air, and so I don't know much of his life for his last nine years on Earth. But I know what he meant to me. His passing this month crushed me, and has crippled me emotionally. A veil of regret hangs over me that we were never able to resolve things.

Last night, my best friend Adam and I traveled to his gathering and the Celebration of Jay. Jay meant the world to his family and to his friends, and that was quite evident as family and friends shared song, soliloquy, laughter, and tears in his memory. I just hope that Jay is in a happy place of total love and bliss, and is able to see the love he engendered from countless people.

I love you, Jay. I will miss your humor, your life, your ethos, and I can never feel quite wholly complete.

“I am very sad to hear about Jay’s passing. As days pass, may the memories of him help mend your hearts and fill the space with the joy and love Jay had for each of you. My high school memories of Jay are ones of joy and laughter. Jay loved entertaining others through choir and theater. He was positive, cheerful, and found the good in everything he did. He was dynamic and charismatic. As I read about what a presence he was in his workplace, I am not surprised at all. Jay had a knack for finding humor in situations and making others feel comfortable and welcome. He was a good friend to all. I enjoyed every moment I got to spend with him. Rest In Peace, Jay. Now you will share your sunshine from above.

“ I met Jay in 2000 working at Cedar Point. Such an amazing friend, room mate in 2003. Was very sad to hear of his passing. I will always remember the voice, that amazing across the room smile. We spoke last month and I wish it was a longer chat. Till we meet again, safe passages buddy, love you!

Russ Aikman - April 05, 2022 at 12:44 AM

“ It breaks my heart to have to share these emotions and feelings with regards to the passing of a friend, a good person and a work colleague.

I remember working with Jay when I was the team leader for Keller Williams Realty Professionals, Ft. Lauderdale NE.

I must tell you that Jay was one of the smartest and creative people that I've ever encountered before. If you've ever heard the term “make lemonade out of lemons”, Jay was this type of person. He can see the opportunities in the midst of crisis when it came to supporting others with their dream and vision. He could see everything from such a 4 dimensional perspective and the beauty of it is that he was not afraid to take action on his ideas and his vision where most people live in fear of failing, he lived with the expectation of success.

Jay's sense of humor is something that, in my opinion was infectious. He can turn the simplest things into a sarcastic joke and the reality is we know that he always came from a good place. At the same time it was a reflection of what was going on inside his heart.

The one thing that I do admire about him is that he was not afraid to share his heart, his mindset, his opinions and his vision.

He was truly an example of being a bold communicator and speaking with conviction period in a time where people are being silenced every single day for expressing their lifestyle and opinions, this man stood his ground and focused on creating the life that he wanted most. It's sad to see that he couldn't be here with us longer.

However in the short period of time that he's lived. He managed to make an incredible impact in the lives of so many people around the world 🌍. This is legacy.

My only request for myself and for all of us is to live life now! The world is going through a massive values change. What we used to think was the most important thing in our life, is no longer the most important thing in our life. Who we used to think was the most important person in our life, is not the most important person in our life.

Unfortunately, we are being discouraged to think independently by the new label that's been broadcasted throughout the world and everywhere which is, "The Great Resignation". This is simply a message that the world is sending to everyone else that we can no longer continue to live the way we've been "modeled" to live and as a world we want and deserve more.

So when I think of you Jay, I know that you wanted and deserved more. I will see you in the next life my friend. You have set a great example of what it looks like to manifest your dreams and what it looks like to knock down one domino at a time which eventually leads to something massive that people can model and people can respect and I know your journey is not finished.

Onward!

“ Becky, Jackie, Donna, Doug and your families,

The only word that comes to mind is heartbroken. Jay was such a light in this world and seemed unstoppable. He was a great friend to us, even as a teen. He was there to help in John's business, with the choir, and with our family - even a great help to Grandma Vivian! We always called him our "emergency backup son". He was such a blessing to so many people- as you all know so well. May the angels lead him into paradise. He is truly in our hearts.

“ My favorite memories of my uncle jay consisted of how happy he was all the time. No matter what time of day he made everyone's day a million times better. When we were at Disney for a Family Vacation, we made up these christmas parodies about jay. I thought it was the funniest thing. My siblings and I joked that he should make us a tshirt. So a couple christmas ago he made us "Happy HoliJay" shirts. I just miss him so much. And i wish so much love to my parents, aunts, uncles, and grandma. You guys are the strongest people i know.
