“Karl was my mother's cousin. He married a woman who had a young daughter and his wife had several boys after they married. I was asked to come and help with the children to ease the task of raising the children. I don't remember the boys names but do remember how much they looked like their father. Karl was a very quiet and kind and gentle person.

My Uncles Harold and Herman Dickerscheid compiled a family history book on their father, Albert Dickerscheid and sent a copy to share with my sisters. I reread it recently to the end of book, which covered Grandpa's brothers and listed Karl and his last known city of residence. I recalled his family and googled Karl's name tonight. He lived a long life. His generation is almost all gone. My family has passed through Indianapolis too many times to recall, going to Oxford, OH and most recently to Louisville, KY
