“ I worked with Kiel for a short time and truly owe him for so much at work... From helping me adjust and fit in... To the times he stopped his job to help me catch up with my own. To the little comments or jokes he had that he always seemed to drop at the times i most needed a laugh or a smile. Ill cherish memories of our weekly Colts chat, our off key karaoke sessions to Blur when business was slow (woooo hoooooo 🎵), and the Monday and Thursday mornings we always spent together as the only two employees in the store. To Kiel's loved ones, i lost my only son unexpectedly almost six years ago, so i relate somewhat to what youre going through. There will always be sadness and there will always be those rough, tearful days/hours/moments... But i promise you that the sadness and confusion you must feel will absolutely get better. Everyone mourns differently, but there will be a day where you pick yourself up and feel strength to move forward. For every rough day or tear shed over my son, ive had countless great memories lifting my spirit and those memories provided a foundation for me to build on and grow. Hold dear those happy memories of Kiel, and take in those stories like mine about the ways Kiel affected someone else positively... and use those as a rock and reminder that even in deepest sadness, there is always a positive and happy light/thought/memory to hold on to. I wish you peace and will keep you all in my thoughts and prayers. My time with Kiel was very short, but ill never forget him for the kindness, respect, and help that he gave me. Time heals and i hope knowing that he meant so much to so many people adds to that healing. If i can do anything please let me know. Finally, to Kiel... 1. Ill cherish those monday and thursday morning memories of us being the only two in the store... Our convos, the music, helping work go quicker and smoother. You helped me adjust so fast and feel welcome immediately. Even though i was management, i always saw you as my equal and respected you and your help or opinions so much. I couldnt thank you enough. 2. Your Colts better get that line straightened up or they might end up with 20 QBs again next season! :) and 3. Life is full of ups and downs... Some people experience more of one than the other... But no matter what, you always came in to work with a joke, willingness to help the new guy, and the type of laid back and care free attitude that helped an anxious overthinker like myself learn to calm down! Know matter what cards life dealt you, you always had such a kind heart... And that is rare these days. Though we never hung out outside of work, i consider you my friend and im happy to have known you. Ill drink my next "Ice Cold Budweiser" while thinking about ya man... Wish we could have grabbed a couple together at some point! I wish you peace. Youre a great dude and in such a short few months you really made a positive impact in my life. I couldnt thank you enough.
