“ As Shauna and Erin's babysitter of long ago, I remember their father, Keith, locating himself in their basement while listening to Carpenters albums for hours on end. It took him many days, weeks even, to complete the build of a giant hexagon in their back yard, using round metal rods. Keith had a wicked sense of humor which was infectious. In those days, Keith imagined himself a child of the 60s, reading progressive literature, listening to the music of the day, and dressing in "cool" clothes, except when he wore his work attire. Keith was ahead of his time as a hands-on father and help mate to Gay, the mother of his children. He adored his children more than he might ever have said. We were all changed for the better by knowing and loving Keith Shields.
